Society, and was chosen vice president of that institution; in which office lie continued until the close of his useful life. The business of agriculture, as a science, engaged much of his attention; and in its favor he uniformly showed much interest; and in truth, few things seem to have escaped his notice, which presented a prospect of advancing the prosperity and happiness of his country. Having filled up many years with numerous acts of public and private usefulness, this worthy patriot and estimable philanthropist closed a long and laborious life, on the twentythird day of January, in the seventy-fourth year of his age. During that long period of intercourse with his fellow men, both in public and private life, his moral character was considered irreproachable. Fins gentleman was a native of Ireland, and came to America, when he was quite a lad, and one of a numerous family of children, for whom his father, a respectable farmer, sought a settlement in this new world. As no record of his birth has been preserved, and since he preserved its date an inviolable secret, which he carried with him to his grave, there are no means of ascertaining precisely his age. The most that is clearly known respecting it. s, that he was born early in the eighteenth century, probably between 1712 and 1720. The residence which the father selected for the settlement of his family, was on the west side of the Susquehannah River....
