The whole country seemed a wild vacuum waiting to be filled with the labors of industry, the achievements of the arts, and the blessings of religion. But all this waste as to natural advantages was nothing compared with the waste of intellect. No traces were to be found that the Indian tribes during the many centuries they had possessed New England, had made any advance toward civilization, or any of the useful arts. Though naturally endowed with intellects equal to that of the white man, their fondness for savage life seemed invincible. In July 1621, Edward Winslow and Stephen Hopkins were sent by the Governor of Plymouth to explore this part of the country, to visit Massasoit the king of the Wampannoags who resided principally at what is now called Bristol, to ascertain their strength, and open trade with them. Having passed Mid-dlcborough, then an Indian town called Namasket, they arrived at Titicut, where they exchanged hospitable offices with the natives, whom they found fishing. There they lodged one night in the open fields, the banks of the river on both sides being cleared and adapted to cultivation. These ambassadors then proceeded six miles down the river* on the south side to a fording place near King s bridge, or the New Forge. When preparing to cross...
