Excerpt: .was only to be detained as a pledge to enforce payment or performance. But under our statute it was held otherwise. In Valentine vs. Jackson, 9 Wen., 305, Nelson, J., said: Though the act--2 R. S., 504, 24--which directs the sale of goods, distrained for rent, is general in its terms, yet I apprehend it must be limited to a case of a fixed sum of rent due in money; or if payable in any other way the value must be fixed by the parties in the lease, otherwise how could the officer know the amount to be paid the landlord? There is no statute providing any mode, in a case of this kind, of ascertaining the amount, when uncertain or unliquidated. A distress in all other instances must be conducted according to the common law, and be held as a pledge until redeemed by the payment or rendition of service, as the case may be. If any other argument was necessary to support this view, it might be drawn from the provision in the statute which requires the officer, immediately upon making distress, to give notice thereof to the tenant, with the cause of such distress, and the amount of rent due.--2 R. S., 504, 24. That case and its reasoning seem to be conclusive that proceedings to distrain could not have been had under our statutes. Now let us see whether there could have been distress at common law. It will not...
